Somatic cell hybridization between two strains of mouse T cell leukemia virus (Blast MuLV). The mouse T-cell leukemia virus (Blast MuLV) was tested for tumorigenic potential by somatic cell hybridization with T lymphoblastic cells from 3 different strains of mice. Only hybrid clones from M-10.1C/MBL.A were tumorigenic, although they were derived from three different cell lines and two different animal sources. These hybrid tumors were characterized by 3 distinct cell surface markers (W3/13, W3/25, and W3/33) specific for the parental tumor cell lines, and a restricted phenotypic expression of the virus. The tumorigenicity of these clones provides evidence that the virus is different from the conventional T cell leukemia viruses.
