The Pathans, 550 B.C.-A.D. 1957 OLAF CAROE. KAROOZALI One secret of the hold of the North-West Frontier is to be sought in the tremendous scenic canvas against which the Pathan plays out his life, a canvas brought so squarely into one's field of vision by the military or the tourist, a canvas so immensely rich in colour and movement, with mountains and rivers and life-giving rain, that it dwarfs in the mind all other experiences of the region. Its cast of the Pathan warrior, the horseman, and the woman is unique—both in the world and in our imagination. While they made valiant contributions to imperial armies, particularly in the wars against the Durranis (this was a wilderness of nomads, not a nation in the modern sense), it is their legendary, swashbuckling, horse-riding role on the imperial frontier from Rajputana to Bengal that made the Pathans famous—in spirit if not in numbers. Among the legendary feats of the Pathans, it is worth mentioning the Kerbala raid, in which they took over sixty thousand Delhi troops prisoner, an exploit that upset the first British governor-general, Lord William Bentinck, to the extent that he never trusted them. While the Pathans are known for their rô
