It's a much more powerful tool than the image-viewing window. You start with an image that is composed as a single image. The Background layer serves as the _seamless background,_ which is covered with an image you have created. When you do a print from the file, it prints on top of the Background layer and creates a seamless image. However, if you do a mockup, for example, you need to divide the image into multiple layers, so each section shows up separately in the final image. Figure 3-2 shows how to create a mockup from a single image. Using the fly-out menus at the top left of the Layers Panel, you create a Background layer that you can edit to your heart's content. Photo: The CW It's complicated: Melissa Joan Hart and Meredith Patterson have a complicated history. In fact, the actress/"Hangman's Hat" host has still hasn't made amends with the former sidekick of "Freaky Links" in the third season of Hart's show. Patterson appeared on "Hart's House" as a local high school teacher. There's something about the show's name that I'm actually kind of intrigued by. It reminds me of "Hart to Hart" in the '80s. I never saw that show, but I vaguely remember seeing the posters on VHS covers featuring the same Hart and a blonde bimbo with the catchphrase "Let's decide." This is probably not the case. According to the "Hart's House" Wiki, the show followed Melissa Hart (who starred in the 1988 movie "Look Who's Talking" and was a regular on "Masters of the Universe") as she stepped in to work at her high school when the real teacher went to "the hospital," where she helped the kids with the letter "H." Eventually, Melissa's life gets complicated. She's dating the high school principal (played by John F. Kennedy, Jr.), and her jealous ex (played by Tom Sanderson) has a hand in her job getting axed. Patterson, meanwhile, appears as the teacher who tries to teach Hart's character some basic economics. That doesn't go well, and she gets fired. So Hart says yes, she'd like to work for her as a teacher. Predictably, they have a weird, contentious relationship, but they eventually become friends and open a coffee shop together. The show ran for four seasons. The reason Patterson hasn't forgiven Hart? There are rumors that Patterson has a sexual harassment lawsuit against Hart pending. (Here's a link to a profile of "Hart's House" on an entertainment website.) Hart and Patterson have been friends for years, but Patterson is seeking money from Hart for her legal troubles. Patterson is represented by high-profile lawyer Eric T. Schneiderman, who's gained

Add `"passport": "~0.0.2"` to your dependencies, save and then `npm install` to pull in the PassportJS module. If you are developing your own passport strategy, see Introduction to PassportJS for more information about how you can use PassportJS to accomplish that goal.
