We generated DNA double-strand breaks (DSBs) in quiescent fibroblasts by treating the cells with N-methyl-N'-nitro-N-nitrosoguanidine or ionizing radiation. After incubation of the irradiated cells in the presence or absence of 1 microM aphidicolin, the cell cycle reentry in the absence of aphidicolin was compared by the increase of the frequency of cell proliferation. The frequency of proliferation was higher in the aphidicolin-treated cells than in the no-aphidicolin-treated cells, and it was negatively correlated with the amount of 53BP1 protein. These results indicate that DSBs caused by ionizing radiation induce the cell cycle in anaphase in quiescent cells.
