Bust of Henry Clay (Tompkins) This bust of Henry Clay is a plaster replica of the 1835 bust in bronze by Thomas Eakins. It was one of the first substantial pieces of public art in the U.S. created as a protest to the 1836 Whig party's treatment of Clay by the Republicans. The bust was the work of Caroline Burbulla, a native of Philadelphia who moved to Troy as a child. After her father died, she cared for her mother for nearly 40 years and became a successful women's rights activist. The sculpture now sits in the Troy City Hall, in Troy, New York. History Caroline was a distant relative of Henry Clay, and he was said to have told her to create a bust of him as a tribute to his achievements. The "Clay Statue" was cast in three pieces and was first displayed at the 1837 Philadelphia Fair. Caroline asked the sculptor, David Watson, if he would be willing to transport the pieces to Troy and cast them into a single piece. At the time, Troy was a smaller, quieter, more stable place than Philadelphia with houses and streets intact from the Revolutionary period. The finished bronze statue was erected in the municipal courtyard of the hall on Chestnut and Market streets, where it remained until a fire in 1865 destroyed that building. The city gave the bust to the fire department as they rebuilt it. Caroline Burbulla was the
